A wonderful Holiday Season to you all!

It is getting cold here at the river Rhine. Yesterday we had the first snow of the season, the holidays are getting closer fast, and at least I am already desperately waiting for winter solstice. As a kid, one of my favorite holidays in this season was Saint Nicholas day: At the evening of December 5th, the kids here polish their boots and stand them in front of the main entrance or the fireplace. When they get up on December 6th the boots are filled with chocolates, sweets and small gifts.

And so it is no coincidence that the naming competition for this new series of custom printed journals ends on December 5th, to announce a winner on 6th. The best names in English and German will be rewarded, and I will give away a voucher to use in one of my shops to one of all the participants.

To add your name to the hat, go to my blog, and find out everything about the journals and the raffle:

GIFT COUPON

Gift certificates are now available for my shops for all who are looking for last minute gifts, and those who want to let the recipients choose their books themselves.

You will find some coupons listed in my Etsy-shop as regular items. For technical reasons they are not currently available at my buechertiger.de site. But it will be my pleasure to sell you a gift coupon directly via email, and the Etsy coupons are valid in all my shops, too.

As a "thank you" to my followers and newsletter subscribers, I want to help a little more with celebrating Saint Nicholas Day: If you enter the following coupon code (without quotation marks and spaces) with an order in my Etsy-Shop before December 6th, you will receive an automatic discount of 10% on your purchase.

"NikolausAktion2010"

I wish you a wonderful time, with the smell of cinnamon, baked apples, marzipan and cloves, candles and mulled wine and enough time to enjoy this season, much success with finding and creating gifts and giving the gift of joy. I hope to see you soon in Büchertiger's Bücherladen!
